Fleet of Raiders Disrupted Off Norway's Coast

British Planes Unleash Blasts Before Germans Fire Single Shot.

(WASHINGTON, June 13.—(AP)—The United States tonight formally deplored French resistance to the British in Syria and charged that Germany had induced the Vichy government to do the Nazis' fighting there. Story on Page 3.)

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

LONDON, June 13.—Britain announced tonight that one of Germany's dwindling supply of heavily gunned but lightly armored pocket battleships was torpedoed by British airmen off the southern coast of Norway early today and informed sources said she was probably badly damaged.

"They must have been taken completely by surprise," declared one of the attacking pilots.

Just 18 days after fliers closed in with British surface vessels to sink the battleship Bismarck, 35,000-ton pride of the Nazi navy, coastal command aircraft struck the fresh blow.

Attack Described.

A long-range, twin-engined Beaufort swept low around the stern of one of five screening Nazi destroyers, British sources said, to ram home the explosive amidships as the Germans headed northward—apparently raiding bent—past Egersund. Another torpedo quickly followed.

"Dense clouds of white smoke rose from the vessel," the air ministry said, reporting the smoke was so thick that the crews of succeeding planes in the assault were unable to observe the results of their own work accurately.

"Soon after 10 o'clock this morning, the battleship was stationary some miles off Mandal, on the most southern point of Norway, and later the whole force was observed to be retiring towards the Skagerrak at greatly reduced speed."

Informal sources said severe damage was indicated by that reduced speed, a gait of 10 miles an hour or less.

None, however, identified the pocket battleship by name and there was speculation as to whether she was the Admiral Scheer or the Luetzow, the only two of the strong, swift 10,000-ton craft, armed with 11-inch guns, which Germany is known to have since the scuttling of the Admiral Graf Spee at Montevideo, Uruguay, December 17, 1939.

No Shots Fired.

The air ministry news service said that not a single shot was fired at the attacking planes by the German squadron.

Covering both the attack and the scouting operations which located the battleship last night, however, the air ministry said "one of our aircraft is missing and one enemy flying boat was destroyed by a Hudson reconnaissance aircraft."

The torpedoing followed up heavy aerial thrusts against the 26,000-ton battleships Scharnhorst and Gneisenau and the cruiser Prinz Eugen, consort of the Bismarck, anchored at Brest.

Informal sources said they were convinced that efforts to get the Bismarck, Prinz Eugen and the pocket battleship loose in the Atlantic showed a desperate German attempt to make good threats to sink United States supplies for Britain.

Dark Airport Endangers Lives of 11 Newsmen

SPECIAL TO THE CONSTITUTION. NORFOLK, Va., June 13.—Lives of 11 newsmen touring industrial plants engaged in manufacturing supplies were endangered tonight when they arrived over the airport here and learned that the field's landing lights had not been turned on.

The ship had to circle the field for nearly an hour while police searched in vain for the airport manager. Finally Norfolk newsmen who had gone to the field, knowing the ship was to arrive, broke open a door and turned on the landing lights so that the ship could land safely.

U. S. Brands Germany Treaty Violator, Asserts Sinking Justifies Any Measure; Will Fire on All 'Contraband,' Nazis Say

Hemingway Sees Aid To China as Low-Cost Insurance for U. S.

(Editor's Note: This is the fourth article of the exclusive series written by Ernest Hemingway, foremost American author and correspondent, for The Constitution. To the insight which made possible "For Whom the Bell Tolls," he calls upon in this series his analytical genius which makes these articles the most important writing about the tinder box of the Orient and America's status there.)

By ERNEST HEMINGWAY.

RANGOON—There are two things you can count on in the present Far East setup. By the present I mean as of this spring and early summer with England holding out.

First: Japan has temporarily lost her chance of making a peace with China. Last year there was a big peace drive on in Chungking. It reached its high point last December. But the aid that China believes she will receive from America has killed the pro-peace movement off temporarily.

The U. S. can count on holding 37 of the 52 divisions of the Japanese army in China for six to ten months for a little less than the price of a battleship. That is to say that for 70 to 100 millions dollars the Chinese army will keep that many Japanese troops tied up.

At the end of six to ten months, if past performances mean anything, the United States will have to furnish approximately the price of another battleship to keep the Japanese tied up in China for another equal period. In the meantime the United States is arming. Insurance against having to fight in the Far East until the United States has built a two-ocean navy that can destroy any eastern enemy, and thus probably never have to fight, is cheap at that price. Always remember that a powerful enough navy imposes its will without having to fight.

Meantime, the pro-peace groups in Chungking will undoubtedly bring all the pressure they can bear on the Generalissimo to have him attempt to disband all Chinese Communist troops. The mechanics of this would be to order the 8th route army troops disbanded for failure to obey military orders.

If they refused to be disbanded, as they undoubtedly would, they would be attacked. Since these tactics were successful against the other Communist army, the new fourth army, there is every chance the generalissimo will be urged to repeat them.

Since the United States is interested in having all political factions in China united to fight against Japan she can counteract this move by the pro-peace groups by informing Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek that the United States is not interested in backing a civil war in China. Grave friction between the Communist troops and the central government has been present for close to two years, and for a year and a half the popular front has been little more than a fiction maintained for foreign consumption.

Since the central government receives its principal fi-

Drop Internal Wars, F. D. R. Urges Unions M.E. Thompson Quits as State School Leader

This Is No Time To Start Raids on One Another, Early Warns.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS. President Roosevelt called yesterday for a moratorium on inter-union warfare in a new extension of his personal efforts to eliminate production-delaying labor disputes.

On behalf of Mr. Roosevelt, Stephen Early, White House press secretary, gave newspapermen an oral statement that this was no time for unions to start "raiding one another."

Meantime, the House Military Committee tentatively approved legislation authorizing the President to take over strike-bound defense plants whose management refuses to make use of federal conciliation and mediation services. The measure also would permit use of troops to prevent unlawful picketing. A final decision was deferred until Monday.

Mr. Roosevelt's statement was, in effect, a plea for unions not to enter new fields which would bring them into clashes with other unions and possibly lead to forms of jurisdictional strikes.

Roosevelt Hears Complaint.

Daniel J. Tobin, president of the International Teamsters' Union (AFL), had telegraphed the chief executive that other organizations, influenced, he said, by subversive elements, were trying to win local groups from "loyal organizations."

The CIO chartered a teamsters' local at Minneapolis Thursday in its first move into this field.

It was the second time this week that Mr. Roosevelt had intervened personally in labor affairs, aside from his order for the Army to take over the North American Aviation Corporation's plant at Inglewood, Cal.

On last Monday, he asked the AFL machinists' union to end its strike at 11 San Francisco shipyards and drydocks. The union's executive council, in response to the request, directed the strikers Thursday night to go back to work.

Harry Hook, San Francisco business agent of the union, promptly called a meeting Sunday to consider the council's action. He said there was a possibility the machinists would go back on Monday.

The five-week-old strike of less than 2,000 machinists has obstructed work on $500,000,000 of ship construction and repair in yards employing about 20,000 men. Another coast development was ratification of AFL machinists of a new contract with Consolidated Aircraft Corporation, San Diego, which has $709,000,000 in bomber orders.

The agreement, which removed the threat of a walkout, was understood to provide for an increase from 50 to 55 cents in the minimum hourly wage, and for a modified union shop. The union had asked a 60-cent minimum.

Across the country, a strike threat developed at three plants of the American Brass Company in Waterbury, Torrington and Andover, Conn. Officials of the CIO Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers' Union said a strike had been authorized, but that no action would be taken pending a meeting Tuesday with the management.

Fair, Warmer Weather Forecast This Weekend

Fair skies and warmer temperatures for Atlanta this weekend were predicted yesterday by the local weather bureau.

The prospect of showers today or tomorrow dwindled as the office announced its five-day forecast which revealed nothing but widely scattered rains until Wednesday.

Temperature extremes today will range from 68 to 90 degrees, as compared to yesterday's recording of 66 to 80 degrees, Sunday likewise, will be fair.

Assistant Superintendent Becomes Representative of Book Firm.

M. E. Thompson, assistant state school superintendent and director of teacher education, certification and curriculum for the past four and one-half years, resigned yesterday to accept a position as Georgia representative of a textbook publishing house. The resignation will become effective July 1.

State Superintendent M. D. Collins, immediately announced Thompson would be succeeded by L. M. Lester, who preceded Thompson as director of teacher education, certification and curriculum. Lester has been in the school department eight years.

Thompson is one of the most widely known educators in Georgia. He served as state school supervisor for four years, coming into the department during the first administration of Governor Talmadge.

Peaceful Resignation.

In submitting his resignation to Dr. Collins, Thompson said he was taking the step voluntarily and anticipated with full understanding of Dr. Collins, Governor Talmadge and the State Board of Education.

Thompson pointed out he would not lose contact with the educational work of Georgia, since he will have headquarters in Atlanta and maintain his residence in College Park.

He was instrumental last year in obtaining $36,000 from the National Commission of Teacher Education for a study on teacher education. About one-half of this has been spent and the rest will be left to his successor, Thompson said.

Honored in His Field.

Thompson is a former president of the National Association of State Directors of Teacher Education and Certification and is on the Georgia advisory committee of the NYA at $1 per year. He also serves on a WPA advisory committee. He received his A. B. degree from Emory University in 1926 and his master's degree from the University of Georgia in 1935.

After Thompson's appointment as director of teacher education, Lester became codirector of Negro education. Lester is a former superintendent of the county schools of Fayette county and the city schools of Fayetteville.

RESIGNS—M. E. Thompson yesterday resigned as assistant state school superintendent and director of teacher education.

THE "COW" WAS SEEN BEFORE—Ace commander of German submarines, Gunther Prien, right, directed operations of a Nazi U-boat devastatingly against British shipping and on the boat was inscribed the figure of a "cow," Prien's insignia commemorating the exploits that gave him the nickname of "The Bull of Scapa Flow." The insignia of the laughing cow on the tower of the sub which sank the American Robin Moor causes conjecture whether her skipper may have been a comrade-at-arms of Prien, whom the Germans reported dead recently.

50 Per Cent Reduction in Auto Production for 1942 Is Sought

Second Request in Two Months by War Department Would Cut Total Output of New Models to 2,644,000 Units.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—(UP)—The War Department tonight requested the Office of Production Management to arrange for an immediate cut in automobile production—the second in less than two months. The first request called on the industry to reduce output of 1942 models by 20 per cent. It was reported that tonight's request calls for an additional 30 per cent, or a total of 50 per cent.

American automobile production during the past year has been estimated at 5,289,972 units.

If the past year's production figure is cut in half, the output of 1942 models—which are scheduled to start rolling off the assembly lines August 1—will shrink to 2,644,986 units.

Aside from the manpower that would be freed for work on defense orders, the War Department's new request was said to have been instigated by the need for civilian conservation of such vital materials as steel, iron, rubber, aluminum, zinc, copper, nickel, ferro-tungsten, nickel, neoprene, magnesium and chrome.

All Atlanta will do homage to the Stars and Stripes today. Responding to custom and the "Show Your Colors!" movement organized by The Constitution, homes, business establishments, public buildings and streets will display Old Glory in token of devotion to its cause in these troubled days.

There will be two very simple ceremonies to which downtown folk are particularly invited.

Both will be held at the municipal flagpole at Five Points. The first, at 8 o'clock, will attend raising of the colors for the day, and the other, at 5 o'clock, their lowering. Band concerts will precede each observance.

Participating will be a color guard from Fort McPherson, assigned by Captain Joseph E. Robinson Jr., and commanded by Corporal James H. Pope, and the Atlanta Police Department band directed by Captain A. J. Garing under orders of Chief Hornsby.

Spirited reveille and morning calls by Trumpeter Willie F. Fortson will attend the morning ceremony, while in the afternoon he will play "To the Colors" just before the flag is brought down to the strains of the Star-Spangled Banner.

Both ceremonies will be amplified with equipment supplied for the occasion by Thomas C. Mayo, of the Mayo Radio and Sound Service.

Stern Protest, Perhaps Action, Is Indicated

Roosevelt Will Wait Survivors' Testimony Before He Acts.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—The United States branded Germany a treaty violator today for the sinking of the American merchant ship Robin Moor and claimed indisputable evidence to justify any measures necessary to enforce the newly reasserted doctrine of freedom of the seas.

It was indicated that President Roosevelt would await the full depositions of 11 survivors, probably on Monday, before deciding fully what action to take. Survivors have stated that a German submarine torpedoed and shelled the ship.

The government made known its general stand that Germany was guilty of breaking an international treaty on submarine warfare by failure of the U-boat to assure safety of the Robin Moor's passengers and crew.

Some See Action.

This pointed at least to a stern diplomatic protest and warning coupled with a demand that Germany make restitution for the loss of the ship, its cargo and lives of passengers and crew. Thirty-five are still missing.

In some quarters it was expected that American action would not stop at this and that in addition definite measures would be taken to protect shipping.

The possibilities included the arming of merchant vessels and orders to the American naval patrol to fire at sight on any Axis raider—submarine, surface ship or warplane.

During the day a government spokesman in Berlin said that the Reich would not be "buffaloed by American and English statements concerning the Robin Moor" and would "shoot at" any ship sailing with contraband "for England."

Won't Debate Contraband.

Sumner Welles, undersecretary of state, made it plain that the United States intended to enter into no argument with Germany on the mere question of whether the Robin Moor had contraband cargo.

The vessel, sunk in the south Atlantic on May 21, was carrying a general cargo for British and Portuguese ports in Africa. Welles previously had emphasized that the cargo contained no arms or military material of any kind.

Three Homesick Georgia Cows Come Home to Masters' Voices

Three homesick Georgia cows practically convicted a man of rustling the other day because they knew their own names.

In Lake City, Fla., far from their familiar pastures, allegedly stolen by a man named J. C. Griffin, of Micanopy, Fla., they stood unhappily among a herd of other cattle, waiting for somebody to claim them.

H. E. Clements, of Crisp county; G. S. Booser, of Colquitt county, and J. F. Ricks, of Worth county, all victims of cattle thieves, stood looking over the herd.

"That's my cow," said Booser, pointing to one of them.

"Any other way of identifying her as yours?" asked Trooper W. E. Lee, of the Georgia State Patrol.

"So-o-o, Lucy," said Booser, addressing her by name. Lucy gazed at Booser lovingly and moored in answer. Clements called a cow. She gazed at him, her eyes alight with recognition.

Ricks spoke to his by name. They all went home.

Griffin, Trooper Lee said, then confessed to the theft. Running two trucks, assisted by a Negro, he had been "rustling" in Florida and Georgia, Lee said. Believed to be an escaped convict from the Turner county work camp, he is being held in Gainesville, Fla.

SHERIFF UNCOVERS EXCHANGE SYSTEM

MOULTREE, Ga., June 13.—(AP) Sheriff T. V. Beard said a cow theft suspect, apprehended at Gainesville, Fla., had a neat system until he was caught. He stole cows from the Gainesville area, sold them around Moultrie, and then stole south Georgia cows to sell around Gainesville, Sheriff Beard said. He slipped up when he attempted to steal a cow from Sheriff J. P. Ramsey's father-in-law at Gainesville, the sheriff explained.

'Just Tom Law' Returns Amidst Gala Fanfare

Shriners' Band Also Brings Home Highest Honors.

By WILLARD COPE.

The Orient came gloriously to Atlanta yesterday as the hometown boy who made good was welcomed back.

Glamorously, the city and particularly the gorgeously costumed bodies of Yaarab Temple staged a parade and greeting for Thomas C. Law, newly installed imperial potentate of the Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

Most of the gaily appareled members of the temple and its six uniformed organizations had made the journey to and from the imperial gathering at Indianapolis, where not only was the prominent Atlantan elevated to the highest office but the Oriental band won first honors. Added color was conferred by the Military Girls' Band and drill team.

Governor Talmadge and Mayor LeCraw, both wearing distinctive red fezzes of the order, came down to the Terminal Station with hosts of others, like Ivan Allen, Howard Haire and Frank Carter, to bid the returned chieftain howdy. The two executives, with W. Frank Luckiesh, potentate of Yaarab Temple, rode with the guest of honor in the parade.

To Back Government.

In a brief statement at the station Imperial Potentate Law said his organization, 325,000 strong, was determined to back the national government in the crucial decisions to be made in response to world events.

Speaking more personally to assembled Shriners in brief reception ceremonies at the Atlanta Athletic Club, he declared:

"Even if I have begun to scale the heights, I am still just Tom Law. The sweet friendships of the years shall remain as they have been. In other words, I am going to take my job but not myself seriously."

Mayor LeCraw, who spoke at the club reception, declared the Shrine's selection of the Atlantan was the greatest honor the city had received in recent history.

"We've always been glad to have Tom Law here and we're glad to have the imperial potentate, too," he said. "He'll keep right on being Tom Law to us."

Fire Cannon.

Potentate Luckiesh added his salutation on behalf of the temple. The spirited playing of the bands, punctuated by firing of a hand cannon by Noble Robert W. Standridge, was a bright feature of the parade, rivaling Mountain Dean, Mike Benton, George Simmons, Henry Heinz and Warren Bearden in their immaculate, well-appointed uniforms. The Mountain's dogs seemed a bit tired, after prodigious performances at Indianapolis, but he made it to the club under his own power.

Headquarters will be maintained here by the new imperial potentate. He will tour the country, visiting principal temples during his one-year tenure.

Moscow Admits Nazis Massing At Her Borders

Famed Blitzkrieg Movies Are Run Off for Red Officers.

By The Associated Press.

Russia announced last night that German troops are marching into Nazi territory facing the Soviet frontier, and added with no excess conviction that it "should be assumed" these maneuvers did not imperil the Soviet peace.

Moscow's statement—which confirmed at last the long persistent reports that Nazi soldiers were moving into the conquered Polish territory split up by the Communists and Nazis upon the fall of that country—did not mention the size of the German forces nor undertake to explain what they were up to.

The alternatives, from all accounts, seemed entirely clear, however: Hitler either was showing a strong threat to get vast concessions from Stalin, or there was actually a prospect of a Russian-German war.

This development—whether it was only a great bluff or whether an enormously important change in the whole course of the present war was implied—topped off a day of heavy military action on land and in the air and an apparently grave turn in German-United States relations.

"Inspiring Pictures."

Films showing the work of Adolf Hitler's war-hardened divisions and air force in the Balkans and elsewhere were run off before Russian officers, Moscow dispatches said, a few hours after the Soviet had stated that large German forces were being gathered in eastern Nazi territories and that Russian reserves were going through maneuvers across the border.

Such movie showings are calculated to inspire awe over the military power of the Reich. Little light was shed on the actual situation, however, for the Soviet Krenlin declared that both countries are living up to their nonaggression pact of 1939.

To this was added the categorical denial that Germany has delivered any territorial or economic demands.

Finns Close Doors.

Almost coincidental with Moscow's report of German troop maneuvers, the Finnish government put restrictions on travel by foreigners in its northern and border districts—restrictions similar to those applied last fall when German troops moved through northern Finland en route to Norway.

London heard reports that 25,000 Nazi soldiers already were in Finland.

Another in a series of known and reported incidents that seemed unmistakably to point to a piece of German power politics, if not something even stronger, was roundabout and unofficial word from Sweden that the German army had canceled all leaves and had called up members of the military class born in 1923.

In London, the British ambassador to Moscow, Sir Stafford Cripps, talked long at the foreign office and it was stated that he was discussing German-Russian relations. Britain was full of speculation that Hitler had made upon Stalin demands which would involve enormous concessions—perhaps would shake his hold upon the Baltic and Black seas—and that a German-Russian war was not out of the question by any means.

See View of Crusade.

A leftist Labor politician declared his view that a German-Russian collision would be seen by British conservatives as a "crusade," and he represented the left generally as fearing that in such event the conservatives would be inclined to urge peace negotiations.

Germany's yearning for the rich wheat fields of the Ukraine, and latterly for Russian oil, has been strong and constant. In the past, Britain's hope, if war was to come, was to divert the German military machine eastward toward Russia.

Russia's disclosure of the German movement toward her frontiers—which could be interpreted as a soft warning—called attention to the fact that the Soviet and Germany were bound by a nonaggression pact, that pact which made Moscow and Berlin virtual allies in the dismemberment of Poland.

Turkey Assured.
In Ankara, the Turkish official news agency, Agence Anatolia, said in a Berlin dispatch today that it was authorized to state that Germany "never demanded and does not intend to demand military transit through Turkey."

The dispatch said "events in Iraq and Syria proved that plans attributed to the Reich do not correspond to reality. The Reich neither attempted to menace Turkey's security, nor had any intention of making demands contrary to the will of the Turkish public or the dignity of the interests of the Turkish nation."

The Moscow statement attributed to the "clumsily concocted propaganda of forces hostile to the U. S. S. R. and Germany" rumors that the Soviet was likewise concentrating troops at the border of German territory, and denied that the Nazis had presented any sort of claims.

The British and "in general the foreign press" were blamed. Although denying any warlike intention, the Soviet was maneuvering reservists near the German border.

Summer Students Support Pittman

STATESBORO, Ga., June 13.—(AP)—Summer session students at Georgia Teachers' College today adopted resolutions requesting Governor Talmadge and University System regents to reappoint Dr. Marvin S. Pittman as president of the school.

The resolutions stated that the charges brought against Dr. Pittman were unfounded and unjust, and that the removal from the post will be a detriment to the cause of education in Georgia.

The students charged that the failure to reappoint Dr. Pittman will place educational institutions in Georgia "in politics."

Governor Talmadge and the regents will hear Dr. Pittman's case on June 18 and will revote on the appointment.

MISS TREANOR DIES Here at Age of 78

Miss Gertrude G. Treanor, 78, of Milledgeville, for many years a teacher at the Georgia Military College and Georgia State College for Women, died yesterday at an Atlanta hospital.

Funeral services will be conducted at 11:30 o'clock this morning at Milledgeville.

Surviving are two sisters-in-law, Mrs. Terrace Treanor, Milledgeville; Mrs. Ed Treanor, Athens, and several nieces and nephews.

Elks' Flag Day Ceremonies To Include Parade

Procession Will Form Near Piedmont, Peachtree Roads.

A parade through Buckhead at 5:15 o'clock this afternoon will precede elaborate Flag Day ceremonies at 6 o'clock at the Buckhead Elks' Club, 2765 Peachtree road.

The parade will form near Piedmont and Peachtree roads and will proceed through the Buckhead business section to the Elks headquarters.

Marching in the procession will be drum and bugle corps, Boy Scouts, the color guard of Post 140 of the American Legion, and pretty girl majorettes. The Atlanta police band will play for the ceremonies, which will be broadcast over WGST.

Ex-Governor John M. Slaton will be principal speaker and Edwin Pearce, exalted ruler of the Buckhead club, will be master of ceremonies. The program also will include a flag-raising and the pledge of allegiance to the flag.

Wendell J. Helton served as chairman of the Flag Day committee, while Mose S. Hayes acted as chairman of the parade.

Talmadge Regrets, But No Worn Ties
Governor Talmadge may give away an occasional pair of red suspenders, but he has no worn neckties to spare.

This was indicated yesterday by Miss Elsie Ray, his executive secretary, after the Governor received a letter from the finance committee of the Good Luck School Cafeteria Fund of Marvell, Ark., appealing for a donation and one of the chief executive's used ties.

It seems the Arkansas organization is calling on governors throughout the United States to contribute to their project. On the ties will be embroidered the name of the ex-wearer, the state and the amount contributed to be made into a plaque and put on the wall.

Miss Ray regretted the Governor could not respond, although she said he is sympathetic with the Arkansas project.

Congressman, Wife, Children Hurt in Crash

Sam Hobbs, of Alabama, in Accident; Atlanta Injured.

A triple crash late last night on the Bankhead highway, near Atlanta, resulted in the injury of eight people, including Congressman Sam Hobbs, of Selma, Alabama.

Congressman Hobbs, his wife, his son, Truman, and a daughter, Rosa Miller, were injured, the congressman said, when a car approaching them, sideswiped another automobile, and then collided head on with the Hobbs' automobile.

Others injured in the wreck were R. D. Wellburn, Mrs. Jessie Beatrice Wellburn, both of 1025 Howell Mill road, and her two children, William Perkins, 10, and Marion, 14.

The two children were admitted to Grady hospital in a critical condition. Congressman Hobbs and his wife were treated at Piedmont hospital for lacerations and bruises, while his son and daughter received treatment at Grady hospital.

Fulton county police launched an investigation of the accident.

Crops Damaged In Tifton Section

Special To THE CONSTITUTION.
TIFTON, Ga., June 13.—Cotton and peanuts in the Tifton section appear not to be badly hurt by the drought, so far, according to the Georgia Coastal Plain Experiment station here. However, there is a surprisingly heavy infestation of boll weevils in view of the extended drought. Corn is beginning to suffer badly.

The dry weather is causing early tobacco to bloom prematurely, indicating a poor quality and probably a poor yield. Most truck crops have suffered severely from the drought and there is no green grass in the pastures except in low places. Small streams have dried up, causing a scarcity of water for livestock.

Pilot, E. A. L. Both Blamed In Crash Here

Aeronautics Board Says Altimeter Was Not Checked.

Failure of the pilot to exercise "the proper degree of care" was held by the Civil Aeronautics Board yesterday to have been the probable cause of the Eastern Airlines transport crash near here last February, which resulted in death for eight persons.

The board, making its report at Washington, criticized "the failure of the captain in charge of the flight to exercise the proper degree of care by not checking his altimeter to determine whether both were correctly set and properly functioning" before starting to land.

Holding the air line itself partially responsible, the report said a substantial contributing factor to the accident was the absence of an established uniform procedure on Eastern Air Lines by which both the captain and the pilot are required to make a complete check of the controls and instruments during landing operations.

Both Pilots Killed.
James A. Perry was captain in charge of the flight. Luther E. Thomas was the other pilot. Both pilots and Steward Clarence Moore were killed.

Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, president of the line, severely injured in the crash, would make no comment on the board's findings. Captain Rickenbacker is expected to leave Piedmont hospital in about 10 days.

The board in its report expressed belief that neither structural nor mechanical failure, nor the presence of carburetor ice was responsible for the crash.

"The fact that he was operating at a dangerously low altitude due to any of the foregoing reasons would have been apparent to Captain Perry if his altimeters were reflecting the correct altitude at the time, and he would have taken some emergency measures to have averted the crash," the board said.

Unaware of Altitude.
"Accordingly we must assume that Captain Perry did not know he was flying at such a low altitude."

The board said it was not clear from the evidence which member of the crew received the barometric setting from Eastern's radio station at Atlanta. It added that it likewise was not clear whether the altimeter being used during the instrument approach to the field was incorrectly set or was not functioning properly.

However, the board added, "in any event, it was the responsibility of Captain Perry, by virtue of his position as captain in charge of the flight, to conduct it in accordance with the highest degree of care which certainly would include cross-checking the two altimeters to determine if both were correctly set and functioning properly."

"Such a check would have been a simple matter, for if both instruments were registering the correct altitude the difference between the two readings would have closely approximated the height above sea level at the Atlanta airport, or 985 feet."

Low Operations.
"If the airport altimeter had read so incorrectly below normal during the instrument approach, the two instruments would have registered very nearly the same altitude. Thus, it must be concluded that Captain Perry failed in his duty of adequately checking the instrument prior to placing complete reliance on it during his approach."

"Although Captain Perry by virtue of his position was primarily responsible for the safe conduct of the flight, Eastern is not without responsibility. Investigation into operating procedures revealed that Eastern did not have a definitely established cockpit procedure in which the captain and the pilot checked with each other in the setting of various navigation instruments and the operation of cockpit controls."

"It is the responsibility of airlines as common carriers of persons, property and mail in the exercise of the highest degree of care to take cognizance of the fact that perfection has not been achieved either in men or equipment and to anticipate as far as possible the occurrence of human error or mechanical defect to prevent them or avoid their potentially tragic effects may be taken."

"Therefore, even though Captain Perry did not adequately perform the duties incumbent upon him by failing to check carefully the altimeter settings before commencing a let-down procedure in complete reliance upon one of them, it is also apparent that Eastern did not exercise the requisite degree of caution by failing to establish a cockpit procedure to guard against just such occurrences as probably befell trip 21 at Atlanta."

An Old Trolley Car Now Used as Wheat Bin

If this year's Kansas wheat crop comes up to expectations, storage space will be at a premium, so James Smid, of Dighton, Kan., who owns 1,800 acres of wheat, has an ingenious eye on the future.

He went to town the other day, put .5 in the city till and took home with his Dighton's last street car. He's going to take out the seats, line the car and convert it into a bin with an estimated capacity of 1,000 bushels.

Troops Learn How To Hide, If Nothing Else

Plenty of Mistakes Made in Maneuvers, Officer Says.

WITH THE ARMY IN TENNESSEE, June 13.—(AP)—Staff officers directing the Seventh Army Corps field exercises granted today there had been mistakes aplenty during the past two weeks but they were satisfied the troops had learned one thing—to hide from the enemy.

"Of course, errors are being made," said Lieutenant General Ben Lear, 2d Army commander, "but we are correcting them as we see them."

"If the troops didn't learn anything else during the past two weeks," said another high-ranking officer who asked that his name not be used, "they were impressed with the importance of hiding from the enemy."

"When the maneuvers first started, they would jam the highways so that one well-placed shell would have killed hundreds in actual warfare. They would park their vehicles in the open, and wouldn't bother to put their tents under cover nor camouflage their artillery pieces."

"But as time went on and these mistakes were corrected as they were found, it became more and more difficult to spot troops. Their bivouacs were under bushes and trees. They tried to outdo one another in hiding their tents—some even hid 'em so well they couldn't find the shelters themselves. Guns were well concealed from enemy observation."

Fall Proves Fatal To H. H. Moss, 53

Holcombe H. Moss, 53, died at Grady hospital Thursday from injuries received when he apparently fell from the Pryor street viaduct, Assistant Police Chief A. J. Holcomb reported last night.

Holcomb said Moss was admitted to the hospital Monday with broken legs, crushed pelvis, badly lacerated face and a possible skull fracture. The injured man, who resided at 320 Crew street, was discovered by a policeman.

The body was removed to a mortuary establishment at Elberton, Ga.

ATLANTA, GA., JUNE 14, 1941.

Your Flag, and Mine

Today is Flag Day—

Today we honor that symbol of national pride and national unity, the Stars and Stripes. It will fly in all its glory from flagpoles, from homes and stores and factories. From public buildings and Army camps and ships. It will flaunt its stripes and shine its stars, unafraid, before the whole mad world.

It is your flag and it is my flag. Beneath its folds we all stand as Americans. It is the pledge we give to the world that we shall always stand, as Americans, for the freedom, the peace and the humanity of which it is the shining oriflame.

Just a few days ago, less than one month gone, that flag flew from a steamship, sailing on its peaceful mission across the waters of the south Atlantic. An American ship loaded only with the cargoes of peace, carrying those cargoes to peace zone ports, sailing within the waters that have been declared American.

The flag was painted upon either side of that ship. It flew from the masthead. It was plain for all to see. But there came an underwater killer, an agent of foul Nazidom. Regardless of the rights of ships and of men, that killer deliberately struck the blow that sent that ship, and the flag it bore, to the bottom of the ocean.

Crew, passengers, women and child, were heartlessly left to the mercies of wind and wave. Thirty-five of them perished. What agonies they went through, during the long days and longer nights adrift in open boats, we shall never know. But imagination can paint the picture of horror.

They must have thought, many times, those doomed ones, of the flag which had proven insufficient protection from an enemy unknown to honor.

But, if message can go through to their souls today, let that message be the one that rings through the words of the national anthem. Let us answer their sad question with the words, "The Flag still flies!" And, flying, still symbolizes all those dreams in which they had believed.

Today is Flag Day—

As we stand in reverence before that flag let us not forget the innocent ones who died because a cruel foe showed only scorn for its stripes, only sneering death for its stars.

And let us give our every effort toward the bringing of a day when all the world shall know for what that flag stands, when all the world shall do it honor and all the world shall respect the united nation that stands behind it.

There shall come a day when the flag of American liberty shall be the most sacred mundane symbol of all. When the very sight of it shall bring respect from all men and when its mere shadow shall be ample protection for all who stand beneath its folds.

An unlimited emergency, back in the home town, was a relative who called for the weekend and stayed seven years.

Good Appointments

The entire south will applaud the appointment of Senator James Byrnes as justice of the United States supreme court and equally will approve of the appointment of Harlan Stone as chief justice. Attorney General Robert Jackson, the third appointee, has made an enviable record and is reputed in legal circles to be an exceptionally sound attorney.

The south naturally is more interested in the selection of Senator Byrnes, who fully exemplifies the finest in southern tradition of men in public life. His stature in congressional circles has been equalled only by Senators George and Glass, from the south, and he will be sorely missed in the senate when great issues are at stake. Indeed, it may be said that he will be almost irreplaceable. But his elevation to the highest court is but just recognition of his services to the Democratic party and his great ability as a constitutional authority.

Justice Stone, a Republican, will maintain the high standards of Chief Justices Taft and Hughes. His appointment brings to the highest post of the American bench a gentleman who has hewed to a liberal concept of the Constitution without regard to his political affiliation or private predilection.

President Roosevelt has acted with high statesmanship in these latest appointments.

No Excuse

Findings of the National Defense Mediation Board, in the case of the striking woodworkers in the Puget Sound area of the state of Washington are such there can be absolutely no excuse for continuance of the strike.

In each of the four points of disagreement which were the excuse given for the strike in the first place, findings have been made that give to the workers practically everything asked. In addition, it is agreed that, on minor points still undecided, whatever decision is finally reached by impartial mediators shall be retroactive to the date on which work is resumed.

On the first point, a closed union shop with an union hiring hall, the same terms as applied to a group of workers in the same industry in the northwest were adopted. These provide that every present employee belonging to the union and all future employees who join the union, shall maintain their union membership in good standing. Secondly, that the employer shall recommend that all new employees shall join the union within 40 days after being employed.

On the second point, wages, the union asked 7½ cents an hour increase for every employee. The board recommended an increase to bring each worker 12½ cents an hour above the rate prevailing in September, 1940. This makes the wages the same as agreed upon in the Columbia River Basin case on June 5 last.

The union had asked retroactive vacations with pay. The board recommended vacations with pay effective in 1942 and to be included in the contract now to be negotiated.

The fourth point, piece rate compensation, involved many minor but complicated issues. The board therefore recommended appointment of a commission to study all problems and their report to be the basis for collective bargaining, with the provision that the final settlement be retroactive to the date work is resumed.

With such findings by the mediation board, there can be only one explanation of this strike. It must be fomented by either direct agents of the Nazi government or by Communists working under orders from Moscow.

The union involved has had ample time to get rid of subversive rats within its own organization. Inasmuch as it has failed to do so, it is hoped the federal government will step in, protect loyal Americans who are willing to return to work and use the F. B. I. or other agency to weed out the Communists and Nazis and put them where they can do no further harm to America's defense and war aid program.

Until strikes are thus stopped, the boast of Hitler that the threat from America will be taken care of by disruption inside America is being made good.

Turning out the lights on night baseball would, of course, save power, but it would allow the umpire to escape.

A Lawyer's Trust?

What will the legal lights of the attorney general's office, concerned with trust-busting, have to say to the members of their own profession in Miami, Florida? The bar association there has ordered a minimum fee of $100 charged in divorce cases.

Without entering into a discussion of the moral aspects of divorce, the action of the Miami lawyers would appear a direct moral if not legal violation of federal laws which seek to prevent businesses from "ganging up" on the consumer. In this instance, the legal profession is fixing prices and preventing members of the association from accepting fees less than the stipulated sum. It matters not to the profession, apparently, that in some instances where divorce is morally justified and necessary the affected parties could not obtain such a severance of marital bonds because of the cost.

If such fee-fixing can be sustained in the instance of divorce, what is there to prevent extension of that practice to all other types of suits, still further removing recourse to the courts from the means of a majority of the citizens? This fee-fixing is resorted to in a period in which a great effort is being made to open the courts to a greater number of the people by streamlining procedure and by establishing new methods that reduce the cost of litigation. Yet the legal profession in Miami seeks to wedge open the door to high costs. Is it justified, morally or legally?

Georgia Editors Say:

TOMORROW'S WORLD.

(From the Augusta Herald.)
When the New York World's Fair burst on a breathless people with its theme of "The World of Tomorrow," some people wondered at the hardihood of attempting to forecast the shape of things to come.

Here is what is happening today to a part of the World of Tomorrow: A third of the buses that shuttle people about the grounds are already in use shuttling soldiers between army camps and near-by towns; 40,000 tons of structural steel used to build that World are going as scrap into the national defense program; the Trylon and Perisphere have been bought by Bethlehem to be turned into armor plate.

Thus today has already swallowed up Yesterday's Tomorrow.

THE CAPITAL PARADE

By JOSEPH ALSOP AND ROBERT KINTNER.

AMERICA'S STRENGTH WASHINGTON, June 13.—Next to the widespread ignorance of the true meaning of German victory, the most disturbing phenomenon in the United States today is the strange failure of the national self-confidence. In the years when their country was young and weak and poor, Americans were as brash as Paul Bunyan himself. But now, when their country is the richest and the most powerful in the world, they are fearful of every risk, and ready to credit every interested statement of their own impotence.

They do themselves and their country a monstrous injustice. Those who say, "The war is lost already, and we cannot change the outcome," are talking nonsense. Only the future can show with certainty what the outcome of the war will be, but it is certain now that the men who know the full facts are convinced an American decision to act will make victory very probable. The American military and naval advisers, the government experts on world economics and politics, and the high officials whose grave responsibility it is to assess the problem confronting us, are all but unanimous on the matter.

They say, first, that American action will stabilize the strategic situation, preventing further degeneration, and giving time for complete preparedness. And, second, they say that when all is prepared, the United States and Britain, fighting side by side, can defeat Germany.

SEA POWER The reasons why these things are believed by the President and the men around him are only obscure to the average American because ignorant or ambitious or partisan men have been carrying on a purposeful campaign to make them obscure. The first and most obvious reason for self-confidence is the American Navy.

Sea power, allied with air power, is still the decisive factor. The American Navy is a magnificent instrument of sea power, strong, fully ready, finely organized and finely commanded. Its air arm is indisputably the best in the world. Its blue-water fighting ships are the equal of Britain's and far better than those of any other power. The naval war plans have been prepared.

If they are brought down from the shelf, part of the fleet will hold the Pacific while the rest goes into action in the Atlantic. There is no doubt in the mind of the competent officers that our Navy, in partnership with Britain's, is strong enough to dissuade the Japanese from any direct attack upon us in the Pacific, while winning the crucial battle of the Atlantic. Indeed, it is estimated that the battle of the Atlantic can be won in less than a month's time. Once it is won, both American and British naval power will be available for use in other vital areas of the war.

THREE REASONS MORE The second reason for self-confidence is American production. In the past, poor organization and a weak labor policy threatened to nullify this country's vast productive resources, which are 50 per cent of the productive resources of industrial capitalism in the entire civilized world. Now, however, the President has at last made his labor policy strong and effective. The organization of production is still far from ideal, it has been improved. All along the line the psychology of business as usual is weakening. Everywhere, in ordinance, in ammunition, in tanks, in chemicals and in airplanes, production is being stepped up. The airplane program, most important of all, has just been rearranged and broadened to give a gigantic striking force in 12 months, and an all but overwhelming one in 18. The goods are beginning to pour off the assembly lines. By next spring our output will be a flood of war materials, sufficient to change the course of the war if they can still be used.

The third reason for self-confidence is the great improvement now in progress in our air force and Army. Both were starved and kicked around for many years. Both inevitably still suffer from such treatment. But the able chief officers and civilian officials of the War Department are bringing both air force and Army up to the needed strength at astonishing speed. The air corps has already been radically reorganized, given a new place in the sun, and made into a fighting weapon which, while not as powerful as it will be soon, is at least very useful. And the Army has already been greatly expanded, and is expanding further every month.

Finally, the fourth reason for self-confidence is the strategic position of this country in the world. While we constantly underestimate our strength, every other nation tends to overestimate it. American action will, therefore, affect wartime affairs everywhere more quickly and more fundamentally than a bombing raid affects a city. In Britain, the leaders and people will renew their determination to fight to the end. In the neutral powers like Spain, where psychology is so significant, the will-to-resist Nazi pressure will be incalculably reinforced. And, in Germany itself, no propaganda will be able to weaken or turn aside the immense force of the blow.

WAY THE WORLD ENDS Such are the reasons for self-confidence. Those who do not accept them as good reasons must assume that the President, the members of his cabinet, the chief of staff, the chief of naval operations and all other important members of the administration are either blind fools or frivolous adventurers. For, if they did not have confidence in their country, only folly or evil motives could excuse the policy they have followed.

Just a little less than three years ago, writing of the strange impotence of this country during the Munich crisis, your correspondents recalled "The Hollow Men," which is perhaps the finest poem of the finest living American poet, T. S. Eliot. They quoted from it Eliot's invocation of the people of his time:

"We are the hollow men,
We are the stuffed men,
Leaning together,
Headpiece filled with straw.
Alas! our dead voices."

If this country does not soon regain the self-confidence it has so strangely lost, it will be time to quote also the poem's terrible last line: "This is the way the world ends! This is the way the world ends! Not with a bang, but with a whimper."

SILHOUETTES

How Much Saved? We're waiting at our house, with unusual interest, for the coming of the monthly bill for electricity. We want to see how much we've succeeded in saving since the shortage of electric power, because of the shortage resulting from extra defense industry demands and the drought that has pestered us for month or two or three.

We've done the best we could. We've watched carefully to see that no lights burn unnecessarily. We've discontinued the practice of saving the porch light burning for the last one home of the night. Now, they have to grope their way across the porch in the dark.

We've turned off three of the five globes that illuminate our dining room at meal times, and we've given the cook strict instructions not to open the refrigerator door except when absolutely necessary.

We don't leave the radio on when no one is listening, any more, and reading lamps in the sitting room are cut out when no one is reading under the particular lamp.

We do hope our bill is down a dollar or two, this month. If it isn't, we'll be suspicious. For all that care and effort must bring result. If the Power Company still demands as much of our income, this month, as in the past, we'll begin to suspect those bills are not quite on the up-and-up.

And, of course, if all these efforts have been of no avail, we can always trade the electric cook stove for one which will use some other form of fuel.

And we could use candles, or kerosene lamps, for illumination. And we could forego the radio. Lots of ways we can really economize, if we don't see results by what we've done this far.

And we hereby warn the Power Company. We're already getting into the habit of electrical economy and if we have to take really drastic steps it's not likely we'll go back to our old carelessly luxurious use of the kilowatts.

Let's Go Visiting.

While on the subject of electric economy, why not make a practice

FAIR ENOUGH

By WESTBROOK PEGLER.

End of a NEW YORK, June 13.—A Blackmailer A very small and obscure note in the paper reports the death in Bellevue hospital of Steve Clow, who in his heyday, about 20 years ago, seemed to have established beyond challenge and for all time the title of dirtiest American. He was a blackmailer along Broadway operating a nasty little sheet which dealt almost exclusively with scandal and rumor and filth, but he finally made a false move and was sent to prison on a federal charge after Miss Peggy Hopkins Joyce had given testimony against him—a public service for which that charming and inveterate bride has never received due recognition and gratitude. Newspaper reporters who were on the job at the time understood that another eminent American lady, the sister of a powerful international financier, likewise had been subjected to annoyance by Clow, but had preferred not to prosecute lest in refuting the slanders she would only give them wider circulation.

After his graduation from prison, Clow was no longer the ogre who had haunted persons of prominence in town, although it may be presumed that in a petty way he continued to live by blackmail.

About a year ago a citizen got a letter from him whining for money, and after a few weeks this was followed by another threatening to expose some dreadful secret. That was one of Clow's variations. Even when he had nothing to expose he would threaten, on the strength of the tradition of the night clubs and the underworld, that nine out of 10 human beings have had "trouble" of some kind.

Had His Limitations. Some old-timers probably will vote for Colonel William D'Aiton Mann, of the old Town Topics, but he was just a cur, whereas Clow was all of that and a purveyor of filth as well. Up to his time he was the most versatile and diligent rotter of them all, and it must have depressed him horribly in his later years to see in print material which made his foulest and proudest efforts seem demure if not a little priggish.

He was in operation along Broadway during the last war, but his limitations may be judged by the fact that it never occurred to him to take up patriotism as a racket. But in those days we all thought the current automobiles were just about the last word, too, and it only goes to show that the world does move not only forward but downward, too. In Clow's time his sort of writing was strictly barred from regular journalism, and a man in his line had to run his own publication. His little paper was a sort of journalistic segregated district.

Steve was indirectly responsible for the enormous exploitation of the social and carnal affairs of criminals and the drunker rich and the well-dressed moocher as news. It was Steve Clow who caught the late Phil Paine, then managing editor of the New York Daily News, in a mood of black despair after the death of Mrs. Paine and persuaded him to visit a night club for the first time back when prohibition was young. Phil was a naive rube from Union City, N. J., who did not smoke or drink and had never met an actress. He glamorized persons of the type known as celebrities because he usually thought them glamorous. Phil was a marvellously successful editor because his own attitude toward this set was that of the newspaper reader.

Clow had met Paine some time before, and he now took him in tow to cheer him up. Phil met through Clow some of the more vicious criminals of the day who were then running speakeasies in the side streets of Broadway, and Phil began to turn up stories wherever he went, some of which may have lacked news merit according to ordinary standards, but none of which lacked circulation value. And Phil hit upon the idea of assigning a reporter, with an expense account, to the night club beat—the real beginning of that phase of our journalism.

He even became a celebrity himself—the ambition of all true rubes—and delighted to be recognized by underworld characters as he walked into some den for his coffee and preserved figs in a basket. It gave him pleasure also to sit with some famous pretty in the ringside at the old garden, where he would edit the first edition in public and slip the corrections and orders to Paul Gallico in the working press for transmission to the shop over the night wire.

Of course, Paine knew Clow was a blackmailer and crook of various gifts, but a reporter doesn't demand social references from a contact or news source and, anyway, Phil showed off on his own career as a well-known man-about-town.

Clow just lived too long. By the time he died developments in the craft had made him seem almost decent, and this must have been a bitter end for a man who for so long a time had stood alone.

ONE WORD MORE

By RALPH MCGILL.

IN RAIN AND FOG ABOARD AMERICAN AIRLINES FLAGSHIP, June 13.—We left Pittsburgh in the rain and fog. Before the plane was well off the ground the cabin was filled with a chorus of snores as 11 newspapermen tried to catch up on sleep, a commodity in which there has been a great shortage here of late.

Yesterday in Pittsburgh on a tour which began at 7 o'clock in the morning and included miles of walking through steel mills, ship yards, blast furnaces and the like, some of us slept in the buses as they took us from plant to plant.

This tour began 11 days ago when 11 newspapermen left New York to visit the chief defense plants of the east and middle west. The trip had the official permission of the army and navy and officers from each branch of the service accompanying us. The National Association of Manufacturers and the army and navy selected the key plants.

We have traveled by airplane, with the exception of one journey by train because weather grounded the plane at the Allegheny mountain section of Pennsylvania. The schedule has called for us to get up each morning at 6 or 5:30 o'clock. One morning the call was for five-forty-five. We have visited plants each day, got back to our hotel at about 5 o'clock, written hurried stories, gone to the airport and boarded the plane for a night flight to the next city. For the last three nights, including the arrival at Pittsburgh, we arrived at about two and three o'clock in the morning.

The situation became mildly embarrassing in Pittsburgh when one of the men asked a question of one of the leading steel manufacturers and then fell asleep before the gentleman finished the answer.

TWELVE HUNDRED MILES

Today it was just over Cincinnati that Miss Helen Button, a most charming young lady who is hostess on this chartered plane, awoke me and handed me my typewriter. "I'm sorry," she said, "but you asked me to wake you here."

There were still snores up and down the cabin. We had been flying at 12,000 feet because of the weather. We had to fly to Cincinnati and thence to Nashville to get over to Knoxville and the visit to the American Aluminum plant there. After that there are some 700 more miles of flying tonight to Norfolk for a visit on Saturday to the shipyards there, where American shipbuilding is at work on one of the most important of all defense jobs: The building of freighters and fighting ships.

I outline this not in complaint but merely to give an idea of this trip which has been one of the most interesting and at the same time the hardest working trip I've ever had.

Today is swell, though, for those of us who like to fly. We are to have about eight hours of it. Outside, at 12,000 feet, we get long stretches of nothing but clouds and then short stretches of sun with the clouds below. There are occasional glimpses of the earth.

Inside it is warm and Miss Button serves broth or coffee. The sleepers begin to wake up and yawn and smile. There haven't been too many smiles of late. Just a lot of red eyes and touchy dispositions. Miss Button, who was born in Washington State, was educated at Furman University in South Carolina, took her nurse's training at Evanston, Ill., and went with the airlines as a hostess three months after completing her training. She is taking flying lessons and expects to have her license within a few months. The correspondents voted her a 100 per cent person.

STEEL IN THE MASS

Many things have been impressive on this journey; but, for sheer mass instead steel plant.

This was the place where they were making the heavy armor plate for our new battleships and cruisers.

One steel ingot, weighing more than 250,000 pounds, was being pressed by a press exerting a pressure of 12 tons. Those things have to be seen to become a reality in one's mind. Otherwise, it simply isn't possible to imagine that much metal in one red-hot chunk being handled by a machine.

We saw one completed piece of armor for the U. S. S. Indiana. It began as an ingot of steel weighing a half-million pounds. It was down to a little less than 200,000. Great holes were being cut in it for the ship's 16-inch guns.

There again it required imagination to try and picture a huge battleship with her sides covered with steel plates, some as large as the side of a house and 20 inches thick. How can she float or make speed?

Man has done a great deal. But he has done most of it with steel. And to see the stuff come in as ore and to try and follow it, in the mind, on its way through the processes of the thousands of manufacturing needs its fills, is an exciting experience.

The lights are on saying to strap in for the landing at Nashville. I'll call this a day and try sleeping between there and Knoxville before starting the tour through the aluminum plant, one of the most vital of all our defense fronts.

Another Letter From a Bald-Headed Dad To His Red-Headed Daughter

By ROBERT QUILLEN.

My Dear Louise:

I may hint now and then, but this is the first time in many moons that I have urged you to read a book.

The title of it is "Two Lifetimes in One." And its idea, boiled down to one sentence, is this: "Success depends upon abundant energy; and anybody can multiply his energy merely by learning to use the unsuspected store he now has."

Of course that isn't new. I have preached it to you for years. But the book does a much better job, for it tells you how to harness your potential energy and use it in high speed without getting tired.

Nobody knows what strength there is in his muscles and ligaments. You might find it difficult to lift 100 pounds, yet your muscles could support 10 times as much if some machine furnished the power.

That old saying, "the strength of a madman," was based on accurate observation. The insane do have enormous strength. But so also have the sane when they are energized by some violent emotion like rage or fear that makes them forget their limitations.

A farmer near town rescued a valuable colt from a burning barn some years ago by tearing open a side door that had been nailed shut the year before. He wasn't unusually strong, and he had no tool except his fingers, yet he was able to pull off inch boards that were fastened in place with 10-penny nails.

Newspapers often tell of similar feats. For example, an invalid woman, unable to rise from her bed, gets to her feet when the house is afire and carries her infant children to safety. Paralytics in a South American hospital got outdoors without help when a python crawled into their ward.

We can't use our potential strength under normal conditions because we think we can't. Before Jesus cast out "devils," he asked the victims: "Do you believe I can do this?" And there is no record of a miracle performed for one who didn't believe. "Thy faith hath made thee whole," said Jesus. Yet we say psychiatry is a new science.

As combustion engines use only a fraction of gasoline's power, so we, for want of faith and understanding, use only a fraction of our physical strength and "nervous energy." The "pep" to achieve great things is in you if only you can learn the trick of using it. Read the book and you'll learn how. Love, DAD.

You are so near this moment I could touch
My hand to yours, and yet so far away,
No continent could matter quite as much
As these small words we parry with today.
Lightly, as custom wills, our lips are moving
With vacant queries and inane replies,
While deep within us, dark and unapproving,
Our hearts look on this vacuous enterprise.

We bid our host goodbye and turn to go,
Maintaining, to the end, amid the chatter,
Our talk of this and that and so and so
And other things that cannot ever matter,
Knowing with what swift ease, if we should meet,
Our lips could pierce this armour of deceit.

For Our Soldiers

Atlanta is knee-deep in a campaign—directed by Major Trammell Scott—to raise $90,000 for the USO. Which means the United Service Organizations.

The idea, in a nutshell is this: Georgia and the adjacent territory are being filled up with military camps. Which means a lot of soldiers.

The army looks after their comfort and convenience and entertainment while they are in camp bounds. But the boys have days off and like to get out from under the eyes of colonels and sergeants. They want to "go to town."

Atlanta will catch a lot of them—with nothing to do after they've seen the Cyclorama—if they did. She has opened a temporary "Service Men's Club," but it isn't adequate. Still, it registers around 300 men over week ends.

I'm not all het up over ping pong and tiddlywinks for soldiers. I don't think they get much kick out of a cup of tea and a couple of sardine sandwiches which take three to make a mouthful.

But there are all kinds of rookies in an army. Some go for booze and women, some go for a book and an easy chair. It's up to the USO to provide the latter—with other entertainment.

Story from the organization is that in one small town near a big training camp—with 40,000 or more soldiers in training—there was just one "public comfort station" and it was locked up by the town authorities over week ends, when most of the boys had leave.

Not all of the $90,000, I understand, will be spent in Atlanta, which has not as yet any big army camp close by. Much of it will go to help the cities close to the camps take care of the boys. It's too big a job for the little towns.

Kiwanis Club of Elberton has placed a number of benches along the walk on the public square, so tired folk can have a place to sit down and rest their weary feet. Which is something more than Atlanta offers, as far as I know. It's a long trip from midtown out to Piedmont or Grant park.

A bit of verse I hope you'll like. I don't believe I've ever heard, Sweeter music than a bird, That lifts within its silver throat A melody that angels wrote. A bird that comes at break o' day And sings to me a roundelay— Perched beneath my window sill— It lifts its voice in lovely trill— O little bird on swaying limb, Sing a song of love to him And in this world of deep distress Beseech a day of happiness.

Arnall Says Teachers Not Under Social Security Act

Attorney General Ellis Arnall ruled yesterday that Georgia school teachers do not come under provisions of the federal social security act.

Dr. M. D. Collins, state school superintendent, raised the question after it was referred to him by Superintendent W. S. Stone of the Wilcox county schools. Arnall pointed out the school teachers were employees of a subdivision of the state government.

AD CLUBBERS—The Atlanta Advertising Club held its annual outing at Brookhaven yesterday and it was quite a party. Here three prominent members of the organization pause during the festivities. Left to right they are Chess Lagomarsino, W. C. Slater and Richard H. Rich. The afternoon was given over to golf, followed by a dinner.

Textile Mills Good Morning To Cut Power Usage a Third

But Can Make Up for Lost Production Over the Weekends.

Georgia's textile mills beginning Monday morning will curtail their week-day power usage by one-third, thus freeing more than one million kilowatts a day for defense industry consumption, T. M. Forbes, secretary of the Georgia Cotton Manufacturers' Association, said yesterday.

Mills which have been running 126 hours a week will cut down to 84 hours, but will be permitted to run full blast from Saturday noon to 6 o'clock on Monday morning, when the power load is less, to make up the lost 42 hours. Mills which have been running 144 hours will be forced to lose 18 hours of work week.

Maintain Output.

These mills, most of which are engaged on both defense and civil orders, will keep their defense order output up to the former production rate and will defer work on non-defense goods.

The textile mills use approximately 3,500,000 kilowatts per day, or 40 per cent of the total output of the Georgia Power Company. All are co-operating, Mr. Forbes said, except those who manufacture their own power.

The industry also is working out an operating agreement whereby not all the mills will be out of production at the same time, nor running at the same time to make up lost hours.

Defense Mills Cut.

Mills working on defense goods are curtailing along with the rest, Mr. Forbes explained, for the power is needed for the aluminum industry in Tennessee and North Carolina, the steel industry in Alabama, and for shipbuilding. The curtailment was requested by the Georgia Power Company, and other industries, power company officials indicated, will be asked for similar reductions in power use to free another 600,000 kilowatts per day.

2 New Georgia Flying Fields Nearly Ready

By LOUIE D. NEWTON.

Sunday's lesson, Acts 13:13 through 14:28, and Galatians 3:23-29, continues the story of the spread of the world Christian missionary enterprise in the early churches. Last Sunday we traced the first missionary journey of Paul and Barnabas as far as Paphos, noting the progress which they made on the island of Cyprus. And now they proceed to the mainland for stops at Perga, Antioch in Pisidia, Iconium, Lystra and Derbe, thence back to the coast and sailing to Syria. It is interesting to note that John Mark turned back at Perga, declining to go on with Paul and Barnabas. Many think his reason for turning back was his unwillingness to face the hazards of malarial conditions which existed throughout the Cestrus river region.

At Antioch, capital city of Pisidia, the missionaries found many Jews and a large Gentile population. They attended the synagogue on the Sabbath, and Paul was invited to preach. Luke gives us this information regarding that notable missionary sermon:

1. Christ descended from David.
2. Christ was heralded by John.
3. Christ was preached by Paul.
4. Christ was misunderstood by Israel.
5. Christ was slain by Pilate.
6. Christ was buried by Joseph.
7. Christ was raised by God.
8. Christ was seen by His disciples.

9. Christ saves sinners.
10. Christ justifies believers.
A number of his hearers were converted that day, while others, deeply interested, asked him to preach the same sermon the following Sabbath. There was definite opposition to the Christian message. The missionaries wrought a number of miracles, not only at Antioch, but notably at Lystra. They spent the winter at Derbe, a strategic city, in which they enjoyed marked success, teaching, preaching and healing.

Galatia was a small district in the mountainous district in central Asia Minor. During his second missionary journey, Paul was stricken ill in this area, and there he spent an indefinite period. The time was employed to plant the Christian faith in the region of Galatia. The Galatians were very gracious to Paul during his illness, and this afforded him a fine opportunity of acquainting them with the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He instructed them in the doctrines of regeneration, obedience, brotherhood, and so forth. Next Sunday we have the Jerusalem conference.

Ben Shafer Held For Federal Court

Ben Shafer, Ben Hill grocer, was bound over to the federal district court yesterday under a $300 bond on a charge of possessing United States Army equipment.

Fulton county police reported that on June 1 they discovered in Shafer's home an army pistol, army rifle, quantities of ammunition and four blankets.

Waiving preliminary hearing before Commissioner David Meyerhardt, Shafer posted the bond. He is also under bond to the state courts on a murder charge, growing out of the death of a Fulton county policeman on Christmas Eve of 1939.

ROTOGRAVURE LAYOUTS ON CHATTAHOOCHEE

Editor Constitution: I wish to express the appreciation of the forest service, and my personal appreciation, for the fine rotogravure layouts covering fishing on the co-operative game management areas in your May 25 issue. Also the permanent sawmill and sustained-yield management activities on the Tallulah ranger district of the Chattahoochee National Forest pictured in the March 30 issue of your paper.

It was my pleasure to work personally with Kenneth Rogers on the picture-taking portion of both assignments, and with Mr. Noble on the descriptive material for the fishing pictures. Pictures and descriptions in both layouts were excellent.

I truly enjoyed my association with these men of your staff, and wish to thank you for your valuable co-operation in informing the public of conservation work of the forest service in Georgia.

NOT LABOR NOR CAPITAL CAN STOP U. S. DEFENSE

Editor Constitution: The American people should be grateful to have a newspaper like The Constitution and its 100 per cent loyal, patriotic editor. The Constitution expresses the thoughts of a tremendous majority of our people when it says, in effect, that anti-American groups, reportedly operating through the American Federation of Labor and John Lewis CIO outfit, are not going to stop or impede our government in its efforts to protect this country from Nazi domination. And further, it states the truth when it says the people of the United States desire to render every aid possible to England, even if it takes a declaration of war to do it.

They are equally determined that big business and powerful monied interests are not going to hinder while American boys are being drafted into service to work for less than a dollar a day. President Roosevelt has done more for organized labor than any President in history, and organized labor should be patriotic enough to desire to do its part. Labor, as a whole, is doing its part, but it should immediately cut out all the rotten spots in its organization and capital should have its war profits cut to a minimum. C. A. SEALS.

"BEAUTIFUL FREEDOMS" CAN BE ACHIEVED
Editor Constitution: In The Constitution of June 10, Westbrook Pegler said that our promising beautiful freedoms to all the peoples of the world is too great a load for us. He added, "These freedoms can never be established until all the nationals and peoples are united in one great brotherhood of the human race, and one of the most reliable ways to start a fight in our own country is to propose that... Christianity, logically, is nothing but this great, loving brotherhood of all the peoples of our little world."

Pegler stated that we are far from this. True. But we have progressed a long, long way from the earliest ideas of justice and brotherhood. History tells us so. Our failure to see this fact does not mean it is false. We simply won't open our eyes.

Further on Pegler stated that our "task is to defeat a military and economic national enemy solely for selfish nationalistic reasons of security and prosperity." That is only part of our task.

Our chief task—otherwise we shall have a repetition of wars—is for each one of us to concentrate his whole effort—small as it may be—upon bringing unity in one great, loving brotherhood of all mankind. We shouldn't belittle what we can do. Two Americans showed kindness and sympathy in understanding to a runaway Chinese boy, and through him, Chinese Soong, are vitally influencing modern China. If we want to build a bridge we follow the advice of our engineer. If we are sick we follow the advice of a doctor. We should consider ourselves foolish to act differently.

Christ came to teach us how to live. Anyone who has sincerely tried to follow His truth knows clearly it alone is life—anything else is just existence. History reveals this paramount fact.

Common sense suggests that we follow the advice of the One who knew best how to live.

Every businessman, with whom I have talked, has unqualifiedly agreed that Jesus taught nothing but common sense. Where, then, is our vaunted practicality if we so tepidly and half-heartedly follow His advice? Such lukewarmness in material affairs would never have created our vast wealth. Let's be practical in the more vital spiritual things. If we are our great energies and resources are more than sufficient for the load of "beautiful freedoms."

Laughs, Drama Pack Punch on Theater Fronts

Hope, Reynolds, Cabot Take Feature Roles in Three Bills.

By LEE ROGERS,
Motion Picture Editor.

About the hottest thing in the entertainment world currently is Bob Hope, who's risen rapidly on screen and radio since that comic part in "Cat and the Canary." Now he's at the Fox in a wise-cracking feast, "Caught in the Draft," highly recommended for laughs, and the best film bet of the week.

"Adventure in Washington" offers tear-bringing drama with a much used theme. It plays the Rialto. Also all-right—if you just want to see a movie—is "Flame of New Orleans" at the Paramount, with Marlene Dietrich for star appeal.

HOPE-LAMOUR PAIR TO MAKE LAUGH FEAST
"Caught in the Draft" is a wisecracking, sidesplitting good comedy making light of the inconveniences experienced by the men of the new draft army.

Bob Hope is the star attraction. The film plays the Fox. Dorothy Lamour, if you recognize her in clothes, plays the colonel's daughter who is responsible for getting Bob in the Army, and then, in a manner of speaking, is responsible for the trouble he causes the Army.

But true to Hollywood formula—as recently was the case in the first draft film, "Buck Privates"—the comedian gets to be a hero before the fade-out. Hope, in this case, running through an artillery practice field to save an army detachment.

Helping out in the humor are Eddie Bracken and Lynne Overman. Funniest scene: Hope steering a baby tank blind while Bracken makes love to a blond hitchhiker in the pilot's seat.

GENE REYNOLDS TAKES LEAD WITH VIRGINIA BRUCE
Columbia has packed some good drama into "Adventure in Washington," a surprise in that it is much better movie fare than might be imagined. It is the Rialto's current feature.

"Adventure in Washington" offers some especially good dramatic acting by Gene Reynolds, the youngster as a senate page boy who sells his country to its enemies and then with the help of Virginia Bruce, a radio newscaster, buys himself back into the good graces of the senate and other page boys.

Herbert Marshall is cast as the senator whose page Reynolds is. And there is some good acting on the part of other young boys in the cast besides Reynolds.

The plot concerns efforts of a special group to find out ahead of time what is contained in a defense appropriations bill. There is a leak of minor importance for which Reynolds is blamed falsely. Seeking revenge, he divulges the real contents of the bill and disappears. Marshall is blamed for the leak and faces congressional investigation. Reynolds comes through to save him and wave the flag. It's Reynolds' picture despite Marshall, Miss Bruce, Samuel H. Hinds and others.

CABOT STEALS SHOW, DIETRICH IN COMEBACK
"Flame of New Orleans" at the Paramount, is chiefly noteworthy for Bruce Cabot and not the highly publicized Marlene Dietrich, whose comeback the film does no good.

Cabot comes through in grand style as a tough sailor-romanticist and probably will win better roles henceforth on the strength of his performance.

Universal gave "Flame of New Orleans" a good cast—Dietrich, Cabot, Andy Devine, Frank Jenks, Mischa Auer, Walter Pangborn and Roland Young—but failed to give them much material to work with. The pace of the entire film is too slow and consequently the actors never manage to get the best out of even the good lines.

Dietrich sings again and plays the role of a gold-digging European refugee in old New Orleans.

RIVAL—Patricia Morison is Madeleine Carroll's rival in "One Night in Lisbon," midnight preview tonight at the Fox theater. Fred MacMurray has the male lead.

Electric Motor Burglars Here Laid to War

Demand for Machinery Blamed for Wave of Thefts.

The demands of national defense have so increased the value of electric motors, local police explained yesterday, that such machinery has become a lure for burglars and has set in motion a new kind of crime wave.

DeKalb police reported yesterday that a motor was stolen from the Hooper Alexander school some time this week. Earlier in the week, motors were taken from the Panthersville and West Side schools.

Similar thefts have been reported from private homes in Atlanta and Marietta with such regularity that the Georgia State Highway Patrol has assigned a squad of men to investigate.

Electrical supply dealers pointed out that a growing shortage of electric motors because of the requirements of defense projects has increased their selling price. Because new motors, of from one-half to 10 horsepower, are especially difficult to obtain, second-hand machines are now much in demand.

Textile Worker Killed Near Athens

ATHENS, Ga., June 13.—(AP)—Ralph Parham, 27-year-old textile worker, was found crushed to death on the Jefferson highway about four miles from Athens early this morning and Coroner Bert L. Beusse said he believed the young man was a victim of a hit-run driver.

Badly mangled, Parham's body was found lying partially in the highway about 4:30 o'clock. The coroner said if Parham was struck by a car it was evidently traveling at a high rate of speed.

Beusse said Parham was employed at the Athens Manufacturing Company but did not report for work yesterday. Parham is survived by his wife, parents and several sisters and brothers.

20 U. S. Ships Hit Before Other War

WASHINGTON, June 13.—(UP) Prevailing capital opinion is that the Robin Moor incident is not likely to bring German-U. S. diplomatic relations to the breaking point. It was recalled today that during World War I at least 20 United States ships were sunk before this country broke off diplomatic relations with Germany on February 3, 1917. The rate of sinkings then jumped, and the United States entered the war in April.

It was pointed out that the present war is in its twenty-second month and that the first sinking of an American ship has just occurred.

German Sub Pact Violated, U. S. Declares

character. It consisted, he said, of hundreds of items, including steel rails, automobiles and parts, chemicals and many lesser articles.

Welles asserted today there was no subject more open to question and less settled than that of contraband and pointed out the United States had never accepted either British or German definitions. This, he indicated, was beside the point in the case of the Robin Moor.

Welles would not discuss the prospective action, however, until the depositions of the 11 survivors are received and analyzed. These, according to a summary sent to the department last night by Walter J. Lintin, consul at Pernambuco, who questioned the survivors, said flatly that a German submarine torpedoed the ship.

The Robin Moor, Lintin's report ran, was stopped in the early morning hours by a German submarine. By blinker signals, the U-boat commanded that the ship's papers be brought to it in a small boat.

Says Nazis Seized Radio.

In addition to this information, one of the survivors was quoted as saying that armed German seamen boarded the ship and seized the radio apparatus to prevent the sending of an SOS signal.

A digest of international law recently published by the State Department says that Germany was among the nations which agreed to certain provisions of the 1930 London naval treaty which were designed to humanize submarine warfare. It was to this that Welles apparently referred.

The pact stipulates that a submarine may not sink a merchant vessel without first placing passengers, crew and the ship's papers in a place of safety. It further specified that ship's boats are not to be considered a place of safety, unless the safety of the passengers and crew is assured by weather conditions, the proximity of land, or the presence of another vessel in a position to take survivors on board.

In the Robin Moor case, the crew and passengers were left in boats about halfway between South America and Africa.

"WON'T BE BUFFALOED," NAZI SPOKESMAN SAYS

BERLIN, June 13.—(AP)—German "won't be buffaloed" by American or English discussions concerning the Robin Moor, an authorized German source declared today, and he added:

"Whenever any ship with contraband sails for England we'll shoot at it, whether it is the Robin Moor, the Exmore (the vessel's former name) or anything else."

It was stated here that Germany had no information from her own sources as to whether the Robin Moor had in fact been destroyed and whether, if sunk, it was by a German submarine.

But in any case it was declared that the question turns on what is contraband and in this connection a spokesman said:

"So far, all presumably factual statements are from British and American quarters. But if the facts as presented by these interested quarters are correct there were railroad rails aboard the Robin Moor. The British have declared rails to be unconditional contraband and in these matters we invariably adopt the British practice. What's contraband to them is contraband to us. The British are traditionally disposed to make the conception of contraband wider than we are inclined to do."

"We've said times without number what all the fuss is about," the German spokesman added. He said the rules of sea warfare were well known that anyone risking danger must understand that he sometimes meets it.

His expressed viewpoint was that the case of the Robin Moor did not present a subject for political discussion or for discussing views on international law.

"It's a purely military question bound by hard and fast regulations," he asserted. "When we have the facts we will know how the regulations apply. We know our submarine commanders have the strictest orders to observe international law. But we won't be drawn into a political discussion at this time—we might be later if we deemed it advisable."

The Business Opportunity column in the Want Ads of The Constitution furnishes a fertile field for small investment and profitable effort.

MERCHANTMEN ALSO FIGHT

Battling Is Incidental to Crews Of Britain's Merchant Navy

(The experiences of the men of Britain's merchant navy, who daily are in the front line of the Battle of the Atlantic, are related here in a series of articles, of which this is the first.)

By ERNEST H. BARTLETT.
For North American Newspaper Alliance.
AT A CANADIAN EAST COAST PORT, June 13.—There are men fighting in the Battle of the Atlantic who have never worn a uniform.

Not unless dungarees, dirty and patched and paint-streaked, can be called a uniform.

They are men of the merchant navy.

Actual fighting is incidental to them. Their real job in the Battle of the Atlantic is to keep supplies moving to the island fortress so that the Battle of Britain will be won. But when it comes to actual fighting, too, then these men have proved that they can take their merchant ships into action, can man their guns and fight and destroy both the enemy which drops death from the sky and the enemy which launches death through the water.

Success Stories.

The tale of a merchant ship which sank a submarine; or another against whose mast a Nazi bomber committed suicide by diving too close; or yet another which beat off a bombing attack and saw the attacker limping away with little hope of reaching shore—these and scores like them are recorded by the naval control service in a few scant words which give date, position and little else. The navy calls them reports, and treats them as such.

The facts are gathered zealously, for from them is built the pattern of war in the Atlantic, the pattern which shows where submarines and bombers have been hunting, where new danger areas may be growing and old ones made safe. This, and much more, the naval control service learns from its "reports."

Orders for Ships.

In one of the many naval control stations of Canada, where captains get their final orders before they take their ships into the Battle of the Atlantic, I saw the gathering of a "report."

Into the naval control office came a short, slight, rather diffident merchant navy captain. In tweed overcoat and brown suit, he looked more like a Toronto office worker. Only an unostentatious white-metal badge in his lapel, showing the letters "M. N." beneath a crown, linked him with the sea. It is the badge of the merchant navy, unfortunately hardly known to landfarers, but nevertheless one of the proudest of this war. It is the only mark which men who take the merchant ships into the Battle of the Atlantic have to distinguish themselves.

The naval control officer rose to his feet.

Submits Report.

"So you sank a submarine, captain?" he said, with a handshake, which was both greeting and congratulation.

Methodically, the captain opened his brief case, extracted a single sheet of typewritten paper, and passed it over.

"Aye, we got him, here's the report," he answered.

Dates, positions and technical details are for the use only of those actually fighting the Battle of the Atlantic. Otherwise here is the report just as he passed it across the desk:

"The chief officer sighted a suspicious craft on the port bow steering across from port to starboard. I was called at once and on reaching the bridge made it out to be a sub on the surface about 1,000 feet away traveling at a good speed. The alarm signal was rung, submarine in sight signal given and gun's crew closed up.

I then tried to ram the sub, but the speed was such that this was not possible.

Opened Fire.

"We then opened fire with the bridge machinegun and ported the helm so as to get the big gun to bear on the starboard bow. The machinegun bullets (tracer) were seen to bounce off the deck of the sub and gave direction to the big gun as it was just breaking day. We opened fire and the first shot was a direct hit at the base of the conning tower, range 600 yards. The sub then submerged, but within a matter of minutes he surfaced again and appeared stationary. We then opened fire again and the sub was again hit at the after end of the conning tower.

The sub then started to sink by the stern and his bows rose out of the water, he gave a roll and disappeared at an angle of about 50 degrees.

"The S. S. — also opened fire with machinegun and 12-inch gun. We fired seven rounds and got two direct hits and one probable. The range never exceeded 600 yards.

Crew Worked Well.

"The gun's crew worked very well indeed, and all the crew are British and were British during the action. The sub did not open fire at all."

"Good work, captain, damn good work," said the naval control officer after reading the report. Then he plunged into his search for facts.

How big was the sub? Did she have this and did she have that? Was there a gun, and where? What was her paint like? Questions were asked and answered until the type of submarine had been pretty definitely settled, and details gained of her that a layman would never think possible. Details which will be very useful to those who are directing the Battle of the Atlantic.

After that, the action was retold, for even naval control officers are human and like to get the word-of-mouth account to supplement the cold report.

Caught Napping.

"We just caught him napping," said the captain. "He was fully surfaced. Lucky for us, not for him. You know, when we opened up with the machinegun we might have killed off those on deck, but I don't know. I only used the machinegun to get the tracers on her and give the gun's crew a better direction. Might have done more though, I can't say. He seemed bewildered."

"You caught him cold, eh?" the naval control officer added.

"Aye, we caught him cold," echoed the captain, and his tone was as cold as the words. He turned to me:

"Little Off Slate."

"There's one of my guns gone in this war... and that's a little off the slate."

"Report after report tells of death and near death and concludes, 'We proceeded on our way.' It's a good merchant navy expression. Day in and day out, despite bombs and mines, torpedoes and gun fire, they are 'proceeding on their way' across the Atlantic, and the naval control service is making that way as safe as it can be.

The "reports" are part of the system. They may be terse and unimaginative, but they give the facts which help chart safe courses over the Atlantic. Which is all the naval control service wants.

It is fighting this war with deeds, not words.

Commission Revokes Dance, Beer Licenses

500 Attend Hearing, Protest Operation of Jook Joints.

Fulton county commissioners yesterday revoked a dance-hall and a beer-sale license following a public hearing attended by about 500 persons and at which Dr. Louie D. Newton, chairman of the civic committee of the Atlanta Christian Council, led a fight on dance halls and jook joints.

Appealing to municipal, state, county and federal officials to make a decent place in which to live, Dr. Newton cited the proclamation by President Roosevelt in which a state of unlimited national emergency was declared and warned "we can never defeat Hitler with drunken soldiers and diseased women."

The commission revoked the dance-hall permit granted the Dutch Boy near the intersection of Piedmont road and the new Buford highway and followed this action by revoking a beer license granted to F. L. Edwards, of Jonesboro road.

Zoning Proposed.

No action was taken on a communication from the Fulton County Planning and Zoning Commission which proposed that certain rural districts be created throughout the county and that dance halls, liquor stores and jook joints be barred from them. The proposal was sent to Commissioner Glover Hailey, chairman of the commission's policy committee, and the legal department for study. There was some question as to whether or not the commission could legally approve it, but proponents said they could see no objection to establishing land use or to the commission's adopting a definite policy concerning zoning of certain areas.

In attacking dance halls and jook joints, Dr. Newton said "sinister breeders of crime are invading our communities and are striking at the citadel of our civilization and the clean life."

He told the commissioners he and the pastors of Fulton and DeKalb counties and the law-abiding people of the communities "will be back as often as is necessary to protect the morals of our young people and to provide wholesome entertainment for service men."

As police committee chairman, Hailey recommended both revocations.

Defends Liquor Stores.

Atlanta liquor stores are clean, law-abiding establishments and should not be placed in the same category with public dance halls and jook joints, the meeting was told.

John Bradley, executive secretary of the Atlanta Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, appeared before a meeting of the Fulton county commission to resent placing liquor stores in the same classification as "dance halls and jook joints."

"I want to resent in behalf of those engaged in the liquor business any inference that we are in the same class," he said. "We are running clean businesses and police records will bear us out. Just ask your police."

Other divisions of the university to be open during the summer include the college of arts and sciences, the graduate school, the library school and the college of theology.

Film Players Star Today On 'Highway'

Margaret Lindsay and Michael Whalen Are Guests on Radio.

A dramatic story calling for a "demure young wife," entitled "Marriage License Renewed," has been written for film actress Margaret Lindsay who will be featured with Michael Whalen on the Lincoln Highway program this morning at 10 o'clock over WSB.

Brunette Miss Lindsay has never tried to radiate exotic appeal like many of her Hollywood neighbors. Instead she usually appears as an attractive American girl whom you could easily picture in your own home, so a part as a "demure young wife" was tailored for her Lincoln Highway broadcast. Margaret is appearing currently on the screen in "There's Magic in Music" and "Men of Boys' Town."

Instead of being "discovered" as a hat check girl or folies queen, she became an actress the conventional way by entering dramatic school. But Michael Whalen, her leading man in Lincoln Highway, went to Hollywood by a more devious route; for several years before he entered the films, he was manager of a dime store chain.

The Swaney Singers, directed by H. Frederick Davis, will go on the air from the Utah capital.

Miss Turek, 27-year-old winner of this federation young artist contest in 1935, will broadcast from Hollywood.

Jumping Jack' Bomb

Is German Innovation
MONTREAL, June 13.—(P)—The Germans have come up with a new incendiary bomb, "The Jumping Jack."

Herbert Scott, Eastbourne, England, special constable here on invitation of the dominion government, described it this way: "It carries an explosive charge in the base that goes off every so often, like a firecracker. The bomb jumps half a dozen or a dozen feet after each explosion. That makes it difficult to deal with when it has to be smothered."

Clothiers Aid Plan for Power Conservation

Shorter Store Hours Adopted by Members of Group.

A new step toward conservation of electric power in Atlanta's business section was taken yesterday by the clothiers' and furnishes' division of the Atlanta Retail Merchants' Association.

At a meeting yesterday morning, members of the association and several outside firm representatives agreed to shorten business hours at least three and one-half hours each week for the duration of the emergency. J. H. Alexander, president of George M. Muse Clothing Company, and head of the division announced.

Store hours formerly from 8:30 until 5:30 o'clock on week days and until 6 o'clock on Saturdays will be altered to a six-day schedule running from 9 until 5:30 o'clock each day.

"Of course we are anxious for every clothier and furnisher in the city to co-operate," Alexander said, "and we shall do everything possible to slant our agreement toward a city-wide drive."

Uncertainty May Pep Up Romance

Dear Dixie: I am just another love-smitten 16-year-old girl, and of course there is a boy in the case. We have been going together for three months. He finished school in May and has been to see me several times since school closed, but never often enough. Sometimes I think he cares for me. What do you think I should do? I do not go with anyone else for fear he will be mad.

By Dixie George.

that. We are engaged to marry the first part of the summer, but I am very much worried and uneasy about this marriage, because it seems to be so indefinite. I have found out in the course of our courtship that this boy is not very dependable. He is not one in whom you could place absolute confidence and feel satisfied that he would not disappoint you.

For example, he has been promising me an engagement ring for five months, and I have not received it yet. He does not seem to take his promises seriously. I would not have my engagement made public for fear things would not turn out right. He hardly ever speaks of the marriage directly. He said that if he were drafted he would rather wait until he returned before we are married. That would be another whole year. I may be wrong, but I have a feeling that at the last minute he would back out. That would be a great disappointment to me. I do not feel that it is because he does not love me, or that there is someone else. I just think that he just does not realize the value of truth and dependability. What do you think of this and what would you advise?

WORRIED.

I think you are very clever to see this boy as he really is. You are very fortunate to be able to realize his failings now, before you are married, rather than have such a cruel awakening after your marriage.

I think from what you have told me, that you have a pretty fair picture of what your future life will be if you marry him. I think you believe in him, and I think that you can love him despite his traits. There is nothing definite about an engagement until a boy gives the girl her ring, and it seems to me that after five months of promises that he would give you a ring, I agree with you that if his actions in the past are any indication of the future, he might, as you say, back out at the eleventh hour.

Remember the words in the marriage ceremony may be sacred, but they are not magic, and will not turn an unreliable man into a reliable one.

GIVING UP FRIENDS IS FOOLISH

Dear Dixie: I am 14 years old. I have been liking a boy for more than a year. My parents do not like him, but I do not see why; he is nice in every way, good looking, and very friendly to everyone. Since I cannot go with him, he goes with others, but not often. He says he cares for me, but when he is with me and I speak to anyone, he gets mad, so I do not speak unless I have to. Do you think he cares for me as I do for him? I like him better than anyone else. Please give me some advice. WONDERING.

In the first place, I think that you are being very foolish to stop speaking to your other friends when you were with him. Don't let him try to tell you that he is jealous when you speak to anyone else, and don't let him try to make you believe that he gets mad when you speak. That is absurd, and more absurd for you to act that way. It will be far worse to slight your other friends than to make this boy angry. As for him caring for you as much as you do for him, that is something which only you can determine. I think you are rather young to be taking the affair seriously, and if I were you, I would go out with all the crowd and have a good time.

WORDS IN CEREMONY ARE NOT MAGIC

Dear Dixie: I have been going with a young man for two years. I love him and I believe he loves me, but I am not too sure about

Woman's Quiz

Q. What is the reason for removing sprouts from potatoes when they are stored?

A. The sprouts receive their nourishment from the starch in the potatoes, and cause them to deteriorate.

Q. Please give directions for making a homemade clothes dummy.

A. From 3½ yards of heavy canvas, cut a pattern which may be fitted snugly to your body. Cut it off about knee length. Cut a piece of canvas to fit the bottom opening and sew it in place. Through the neck opening stuff the dummy with excelsior, then close the neck. Mount the dummy on a broomstick fastened in a sturdy weighted box. The seams of the dummy are the same back and front. If an arm is needed, make a sleeve by a long one-piece sleeve pattern, stuff it, and sew it to the shoulder of the dummy.

Q. What kind of wine should be served with beef?

A. Red wine, such as claret or burgundy.

Q. If a wedding present is delayed, should an explanation be sent with the gift?

A. A brief note explaining the delay should accompany the gift.

Q. Please tell me how to prepare borsch.

A. Use these ingredients: 1 quart consommé, 2 large beets, diced; 1 cup chopped cabbage; 2 chopped onions. Cook vegetables until tender, in consommé, adding water as necessary. Strain or not, as desired. Russian borsch is served in heavy pottery bowls with a tablespoon of heavy sour cream on each bowl.

The sleeves are pivot type to insure complete armhole freedom when swinging a golf club or driving a car. Below is shown a cotton sailcloth dinner dress. The blouse is chartreuse, the skirt a deep red with a purple sash of novelty straw cloth.

Use of Drugs to Kill Pain Demands a Doctor's Advice

By Dr. William Brady.

Last warning to publishers of dictionaries: You had better have the NO SALE indicator in good working order when you come around here with the next edition if it does not include the nouns cri and vite. And while you are at it, please have another go at the verb ostrich, for I am confident Gerard Darrow, Q. K., will support me when I say the ostrich does no such thing—and even if the bird ever does hide his head in the sand he is not merely pretending not to see, he just honestly does not see.

That's the way it is with the wisecracks. The wisecracks are a cut above the morons intellectually, although outnumbered by them at least two to one. They are even harder to teach than the morons because when a wisecracker acquires a little knowledge that's all he wants to know, whereas a moron frankly admits he doesn't know and does as he is told. Wisecracks impose childlike faith in the efficacy of a dash of something they believe to be "antiseptic" to prevent or cure infection, whether of a wound, burn or similar lesion or of the nose or throat. They have the same touching confidence in a dose of anything they believe to be "stimulant" to prevent or relieve exhaustion or collapse or shock or weakness.

To the wisecracker mentality it seems as reasonable as the speller makes it seem that one can indulge in abuses of all kinds and remain immune from the consequences if one will only take a good dose of this or that nostrum. It never occurs to the wisecracker intellect that killing ache, pain or other sense by means of analgesic drugs is not equivalent to correcting the cause of the distress.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Corn and Callus.

Please give the recipe for your corn and callus remedy. (J. D.) Answer—Paint corn or callus once daily with solution of 30 grs. of salicylic acid in one-half ounce of flexible collodion. In a week or 10 days corn or callus will soften and may be wiped away. Unless pressure and friction are avoided the corn or callus will return.

MY DAY: Graduation Service Held for Shut-ins

By Eleanor Roosevelt.

NEW YORK CITY, Thursday.—I attended the graduation exercises yesterday afternoon for Washington's shut-in pupils. Many of them were either in hospitals or unable to leave their homes, but a good many could be brought to the school. It was wonderful to watch their faces and to see how well they took part in the exercises. They sang and acted and were given badges of merit for effort and proficiency in various lines.

Unfortunately, the appropriation provided last year was not sufficient to reach all the shut-in children of the district. Nearly all large cities consider this educational service part of the public school education, but the District of Columbia has carried on its program under the public welfare board. Next year, it is hoped, it will be placed by congress under the board of education, who have collaborated very closely.

Even though the commissioners requested only $15,000, so many people have appeared before the congressional committee it is hoped the amount will be increased. At present, these youngsters can have only one hour and a half of schooling a week, and they should have one hour a day, five days a week.

In spite of their physical handicaps, these children, like all others I know in a similar condition, look cheerful and smiling and are deeply appreciative of anything which is done for them.

Later, at the White House, the quartet of the West Virginia ladies who call themselves the West Virginia Legionnaires, came to tea. After being shown through the White House, they went off to their engagement, leaving Miss Edna Ferber, Mrs. Anne O'Hare McCormick, Mrs. Dorothy Ballanca and Miss Louise Morley to discuss the radio program for defense bonds which they were about to put on the air.

As I told you, we went on the air at 6:30, but in between, at 5:30, Mrs. Henry Wallace and I went out on the lawn to greet Mrs. Samuel Rosenman, who stood with us while we received the delegates of the National Emergency Housing Conference.

A few people came to dinner, among them Commander Flanagan, who is starting off for London before long, and Dr. John Studebaker, who had one or two things he wanted to talk about to me. He had a chance to talk to Miss Louise Morley about the International Students' Service school at Campobello this summer and was most enthusiastic.

Gables Are Planning to Adopt Twins

By Sheila Graham.

HOLLYWOOD, June 13.—Carole Lombard has promised Gregory La Cava to star in his next picture. This would seem to indicate that the stork will not make stand that the couple are now shopping for twins to adopt—a boy and a girl—and have asked the Cradle in Chicago to watch out for them.

Miss Lombard has a special place for La Cava in her business affections. He directed "My Man Godfrey," the picture in which Carole changed from heavy drama to light comedy and renewed her lease on film life. Leading man in the new film will probably be Melvyn Douglas, who is surely the most overworked actor in Hollywood. Melvyn has just completed "Our Wife" and starts work this week in the Garbo film before reporting to La Cava.

Humphrey Bogart is off suspension and co-stars with Mary Astor in "The Maltese Falcon." . . . Abbott and Costello in "Rio Rita" should be something not to miss. . . . Anna Q. Nilsson (remember her?) has a small role in Harry Sherman's "Timber Wolves." . . . "Moon Over Miami" with Carole Landis in attendance, gets a world premiere in Miami next Wednesday. . . . Ruth Gordon, stage actress and Mrs. Abraham Lincoln in the recent movie, has a good part in the new Garbo picture.

Tommy Guinan, brother of the late "Texas," has been paid $15,000 by Paramount for the right to film his sister's life story. The price also includes the use of 10 bulky scrap books belonging to the "hello-sucker" lady of the glittering twenties. The picture, titled "Tex Guinan," will feature several songs and a musical background. Producer Robert Sisk would like to get Carole Lombard for the leading role.

Age Is Less Important Than Established Habits In Selection of Exercise

By Ida Jean Kain.

Whether or not you are too old to exercise depends largely on whether you have given in to laziness all your life. That not too complimentary conclusion about some of you suggested itself when an 87-year-old Cleveland resident who takes her daily dozen off-handedly that she was brought up to work hard.

She told me that she began to exercise in her 20's. I wish you could see her. She is remarkably firm and supple. She wouldn't, for anything, miss her daily calisthenics. She does upward stretching, forward bending to touch her toes—which is a good test of suppleness—sideward bending, arm circling and deep-knee bends.

Her posture is something of a marvel, too. She is youthfully erect, not just straight. And do you think she slumped down into a soft, comfortable chair for this chat? Oh, no. She sat upright on a piano stool and occasionally gave herself a little whirl from sheer exuberance.

So don't get the idea that you might be too old to exercise. It isn't your age—it's how much exercise you are accustomed to doing. You can't suddenly take up exercise and romp through a strenuous set without feeling unpleasant after-effects. You should begin slowly, increase the stint very slowly, and keep it up.

If you would simply put your joints through their full range of motion every day, it would not only keep you from getting stiff, but it would give you a sense of well being through the stimulation to the nerve endings in the joints.

Here is a set which moves all the joints. Circle alternate arms from the shoulders, up, around and down. Stretch upward. Bend forward and sideward at the waist. Swing your legs loosely from the hips. Go into a deep-knee bend to loosen up the knee joints. And flex your fingers to keep your knuckles limber. Just those few simple movements will help to keep you supple and younger than your years.

Apparently, there is no age limit on exercise. What it takes is a little gumption!

This lively lady also proves a point about diet. She has always preferred simple foods—dark breads and cheese, milk, fruits and vegetables—and she never discards the "pot liquor" but always uses it as a beverage. And there's another explanation of her high vitality, good habits of eating all her life.

Home Study With Charts Gives Artistic Talent Chance

"I could never do that!" you think as you watch the wizard skill with which an illustrator draws. But are you so sure you couldn't? In advertising art and in illustration, as in any art, it's part talent and part training.

Home study with charts and diagrams could give your talents a chance. One of the first things you learn is the trick of seeing the body in simple geometric forms.

Drawing a leg, for instance, you see it in three sections. 1.—The thigh down to the knee, which you sketch with two slightly tapering, almost parallel lines. 2.—The gradually widening part from the knee to the fullest part of the calf. 3.—The tapering lines of the long descent from calf to ankle.

Drawing the head, body and arms goes smoothly, too, when you learn their basic forms. Then you learn to fill in details of feature and clothing, to add light and shade to give your figure roundness.

Our 40-page booklet, A Simple Course in Illustration and Advertising Art, has 237 illustrations and diagrams with clear instructions on drawing the human figure, adding details of clothing and expression. Explains light and shade, foreshortening, perspective, composition; how to draw dogs and horses.

The Army IN GEORGIA

"Darn those subs!—If this rain keeps up, they'll be using our drill field next."

Eighteen truck loads of bombs are being moved by the Army through south Georgia, from Savannah to Fort Benning, at Columbus—the second movement of bombs through Georgia this week. None of the weapons will be "live" or dangerous to transport, Army authorities pointed out. They will be complete units except for lack of the tiny detonator necessary to set them off. The Army trucks will be escorted by two cruise cars of the Georgia State Patrol, which earlier in the week conveyed a similar movement of bombs along the same route. The trucks will leave Savannah at 5 o'clock this morning, and will pass through Reidsville, McRae, Hawkinsville, Montezuma and Buena Vista, on the way to Columbus.

TRANSFERS AFFECT FORT McPHERSON MEN

Captain James R. Dick, of the infantry, has been transferred from Fort McPherson, Washington. The adjutant's office at Fort McPherson also announced yesterday that Hugh P. Wallace had been assigned to the replacement training center at Camp Callahan, Cal., and that Charlton H. Wimberly had been assigned to the local reception center.

U. S. O. Gifts Are Deductible In Tax Report

Considered Under Same Rule as 'Charities,' Allen Says.

Marion Allen, collector of internal revenue, Friday called attention to the fact that contributions to the United Service Organization fund for financial community centers and recreation programs for service men, and "deductible" in calculating income for federal tax purposes.

He pointed out that the Treasury Department has ruled that such contributions are allowable "in the manner and to the extent provided by section 23 (c) and (d) of the internal revenue code" and corresponding provisions of revenue acts which cover corporate donations.

Under these provisions of the law, he said, individuals are permitted to contribute to "designated charities," an amount which does not exceed 15 per cent of their net income. Corporations are allowed to make such contributions up to five per cent of their income.

The ruling by the Treasury Department, it is believed, will result in many individuals and corporate subscriptions to U. S. O.

Administration leaders of Fulton and DeKalb counties and Atlanta yesterday postponed a scheduled meeting to map preliminary plans for creating the metropolitan hospital authority. The session is now set for 3 o'clock next Tuesday afternoon at the office of Thomas K. Glenn, chairman of the Grady hospital board of trustees.

Revised city ordinances providing sufficient fees for inspection services to provide an effective smoke abatement bureau for Atlanta will be offered at the July 7 meeting of city council, Mayor LeCraw said yesterday. The plan will not be ready for council at Monday's meeting, he added.

City council's finance committee will not offer any resolutions at Monday's session asking additional appropriations, Councilman John A. White, finance committee chairman, announced yesterday after a conference with Mayor LeCraw and City Comptroller B. Graham West. The trio conferred for about an hour yesterday and White emerged to say "there isn't any money at this time."
